Steps to Where?

For several years, I worked as a special guide in one of the largest department stores in the world. I spoke six foreign languages. So when an important person came to the city and wanted to see our store, I was the guide provided of course that I spoke his language. There were three other persons like myself in the store. Between us, we commanded almost every important language in the world.

The important person came from a land that was still fairly primitive. It was his first trip outside his native country. I took him around the store. When he saw the escalator, he stopped and remained there for fifteen minutes counting each step as it went up to the next floor.

"So you have a warehouse for these many steps," he said. "Must be big business here selling steps."

Blind Beggar(?)

This one happened right here in our big city. He was standing outside a store a very well dressed man with dark glasses over his eyes and a sign on him that read: "I am blind. Please help me." I carry a change purse. I took it out and removed a quarter from it. The coin fell from my hand and rolled some distance. He bent down, picked it up, and put it into his cup.

"Thank you," he said. "God bless you for your kind heart."

"I saw what you did," I said. "You aren't blind at all."

"Of course not," was the unexpected reply. "The blind man here is eating in the cafeteria across the street. I'm just giving him a helping hand."

Language Difficulty

My boyhood was spent in Mexico. My father was a mining engineer. We returned to the United States when I was 12. Here I went to college and became a teacher of Spanish in a high school for ten years. One day the principal sent for me.

"A group of our teachers are going to Mexico this summer. I wonder if you could give them some help in the language. They are willing to stay in two afternoons if it is agreeable with you."

I did this, and they certainly were an eager bunch of adult students. Then came summer, and they went to Mexico. When school opened in September, I was curious and wanted to find if my language teaching had been helpful. So I spoke to Miss Davies:

"Did you have any difficulty in speaking Spanish in Mexico?"

"None at all," she smiled. "Only the natives there had a lot of difficulty in understanding me."

Standing Up

She was young and very charming. She was standing in a crowded bus. The young man took one look at her.

"Miss, may I offer you my seat?" he asked just in the way a proper gentleman would do it.

"No thanks," she replied. "Keep the seat. I prefer to stand."

He figured logically that she was only going to ride a short distance. But he was wrong. She went to the end of the line which was also his stop. They both got off the bus, and he spoke to her.

"I hope I didn't offend you when I offered my seat to you."

"My first horseback riding lesson," she smiled. "I can't sit down."

A Lesson in Unselfishness

Mother decided that the time had come in life to teach her son, Paul, the difference between a selfish person and an unselfish person. She knew words alone would not be effective. She needed a practical demonstration. So she put Paul and his younger brother, Tommy, at the table. She put a big apple on a dish with a knife at the side.

"This is to show you what I mean by an unselfish child," she began. "You will cut the apple into a big piece and a small piece. As an unselfish child, you will give the big piece to your brother and keep the small piece for yourself. Do you understand?"

Paul was quick and he pushed the apple and knife over to his young brother.

"Let him learn the lesson first, mother", he suggested.

The Old Car

There are some people who will not get a new car until the old one has really fallen into pieces. So Frank brought his 1952 car to his service station for an oil change. The mechanic sighed as he took the order to change the oil and grease up the car. The next day, Frank came for his car.

"Anything wrong with the car that needs fixing?" he asked. "If so, just let me know."

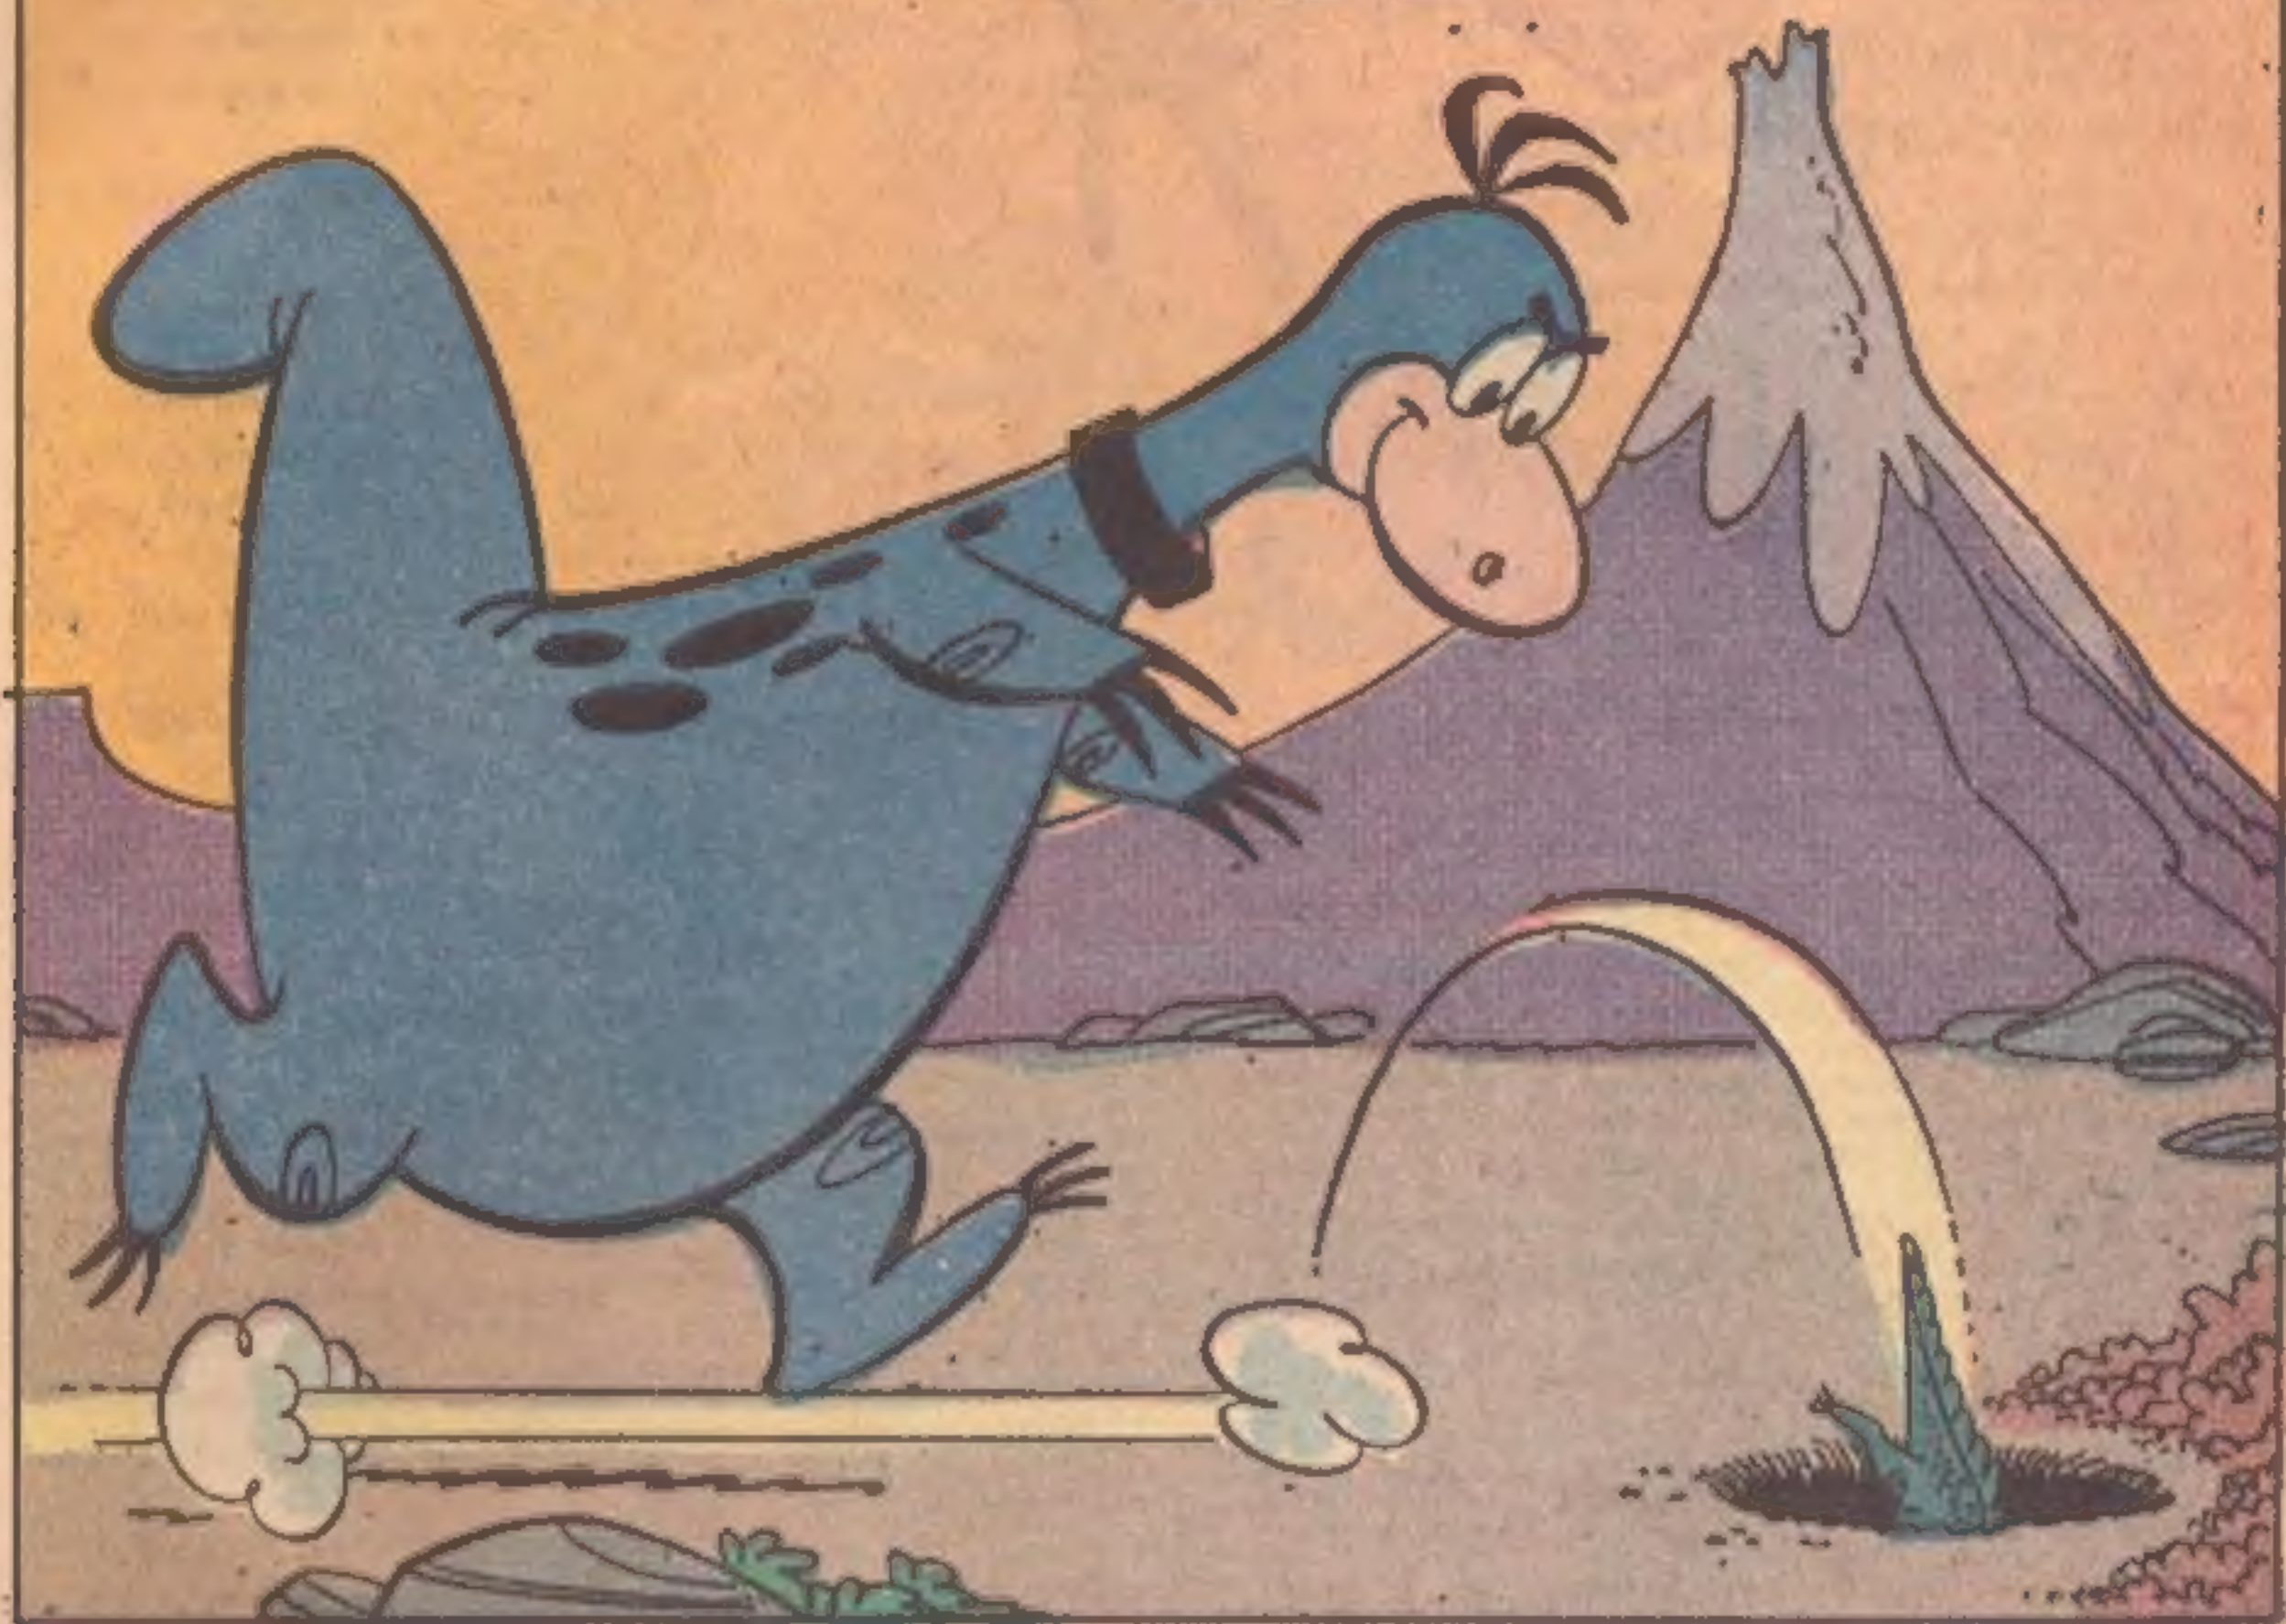

"I didn't change the oil this time," said the mechanic. The oil is o.k. What has to be changed is the car itself."
